Administration

Section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973

Section 508 to the U.S. Rehabilitation Act of 1973 prohibits federal agencies from buying, developing, maintaining, or using electronic and information technology that are inaccessible to people with disabilities.

Although Section 508 came about over 25 years ago, little progress was made until 1998, when Congress passed the Workforce Investment Act, amending the law to give members of the public and government employees with disabilities the right to sue agencies.

The goal of this training is to make you aware of the components of Section 508 and your requirements to comply with the law. This will allow learners to have a positive and engaging learning experience and protect the agency from liability in the event of a lawsuit.

It's a what??

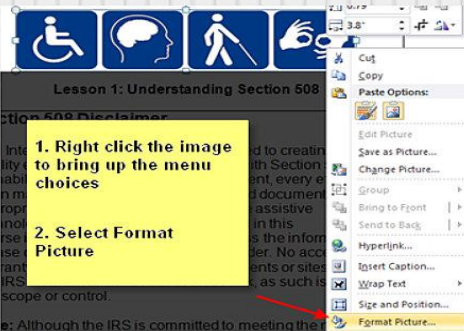

Just wait until you hear about Section 504. You'll learn about that soon...

Microsoft Word

Graphics in Word Documents

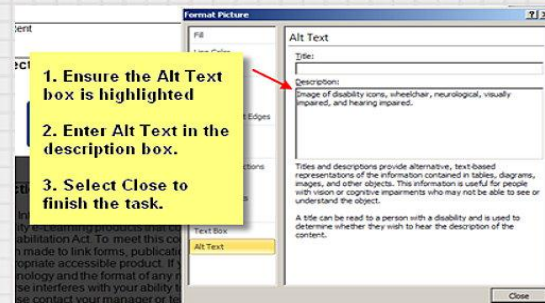

One of the biggest errors made when creating word documents is including graphics without alternative content descriptions. This is a very simple process and is a legal requirement in some cases.

This is an example of an image in Word 2010. Select the image needing description and follow the steps provided.

Tables are really tough to make accessible. It is best to find other ways of presenting this data. If not, use a table and create an alternative document for VI users.

1. Ensure the Alt Text box is highlighted
2. Enter Alt Text in the description box.
3. Select Close to finish the task.
